

For this project, I chose to document my childhood on the internet with relation to pop-up ads. I chose to hand-draw them to show the innocence and naivety in falling for tempting offers, but also how overwhelming they can be when they take up a screen. I had hidden messages in the ads ('yikes'), and used bright colours to show how attractive they looked.